SKIP is an initiative set up by the Ministry of Social Development, with the simple, but complex vision for all children in New Zealand to be raised in a positive way by parents and caregivers who feel confident about managing children's behaviour as part of a loving, nurturing relationship.

SKIP works with national and local organisations to support New Zealand parents. SKIP does this by providing free, innovative and fun resources, as well as funding community organisations. Anna also works as a part of the All Right? marketing campaign designed to help people living in Canterbury think about their mental health and wellbeing, and advocating that wellbeing is at the heart of Canterbury's recovery.
